- Title : home automation and detection
- Automation: Implementing systems to automate household tasks such as lighting, temperature control, and appliance management,
- Detection in home automation typically involves the use of sensors to detect motion, changes in temperature, light levels, smoke, carbon monoxide, and other environmental factors. These sensors are connected to a central control hub, often a smart home system or a mobile app, which can alert homeowners and trigger automated responses or actions based on the detected conditions. This capability enhances home security, safety, and energy efficiency by allowing proactive monitoring and control of the home environment even when the occupants are away,
