ABOUT ME

A background in Journalism has enabled me with critical thinking skills to explore all sides to a story. My experience with Psychology research makes me confident in tools of research. Majoring in English has expanded my calibre in academic and critical writing. Being literate in design and video-editing software has allowed me to present information in novel and creative ways. I am inclined towards reading and writing about gender and sexuality education as well as having a nuanced understanding of the intersection of class, caste, gender and opportunities.

ABOUT ME

I am a language and literature enthusiast. Movies, books, and languages are my favorite ways of expressions. I take keen interest in writing scripts and telling stories. In life, most of my efforts go into thriving, but I am also aware of the struggles of survival. As an autodidact, I teach myself languages and like to learn history, religions, philosophy, and various other life skills. I hope to empower people through language so that they can communicate well and be liberated from all inequalities.
